

We are the champions.

There's no denying that Pittsburgh is a sports town to its core. Sports have been synonymous with our region for as long as steel. It doesn't matter what the game is — if you can throw it, kick it, run it, or watch it, we're all in. No matter what your playing field looks like, you'll find a home for it here.

And, true to our hands-on roots, we usually aren't content to sit on the sidelines. Whether you're a former pro, learning something new, or returning to the pastime you loved as a child, you're likely to find a place to flex your muscle memory, and like-minded people to play with.

Did you know?

Our "City of Champions" claim to fame comes from the 16 titles won collectively by the Steelers, Penguins, and Pirates. But we're also home to the Pittsburgh Riverhounds (professional soccer), Pittsburgh Passion (women's football), Pittsburgh Knights (e-sports), and the Pittsburgh Thunderbirds (ultimate Frisbee).

The region also produced golf legend Arnold Palmer, U.S. Women's National Soccer Team defender Meghan Klingenberg, X Games BMX biker Chris Doyle, sprinter and bobsledder Lauryn Williams, and dozens of other Olympic champions.

From the NCAA Division I to intramurals, the region's colleges and universities play a significant role in Pittsburgh's sports culture. Here, you'll see everything from football to foosball, basketball to broomball, nationally televised games and late-night dorm rivalries.

Neighborhoodly athletes

Maybe accessibility has contributed to Pittsburgh's love affair with sports: if you live here long enough, you're likely to run into a pro you've seen at a game. We're a down-to-earth kind of place, and athletes aren't just celebrities; they're also our neighbors. (If you find yourself trying on a championship ring at a block party or the Stanley Cup shows up at your local bar, you'll know what we mean.)
